

Queensland State Archives Recordkeeping Transformation Program

🔗 Why?

A step up from Recordkeeping and You, this learning tool allows public service employees to consolidate their recordkeeping knowledge and skills in a simulated work situation.

⚙️ What is it?

A web-based gamified experience that can be accessed via the ForGov website or you can host it internally on your e-learning management system.

The module uses gamification techniques to guide learners through their records management responsibilities while building a new park in the fictional town of Lamington.

It highlights the consequences to business processes, service delivery and community outcomes if staff don't properly create and manage records.

The training is based on the award-winning City of Sydney Records Challenge and has been customised for Queensland and Qld State Archives with permission under a creative commons licence.

Records Management Challenge Training

The Records Management Challenge Training is part of the Recordkeeping Transformation Program, which aims to improve the standard of records and information management across government. Effective records and information management are at the heart of open, accountable and modern government. The Program strives to instil greater confidence in the government's ability to manage and value its records and information. There is great potential for the better use and reuse of records in support of evidence-based decision making and opportunities to obtain hindsight, insight and foresight from the records we create every day.

✔️ What do you need to know?

- The training is free and will be available from the ForGov website.
- The training can be used for staff inductions, as a refresher or as part of a wider records management program in your agency.
- It is an opportunity to present records management in your agency in a new and engaging way.
- It provides an opportunity to explore what scenarios could play out for your agency.
- The training provides an overview and simulated work situations of public service employees responsibilities in creating, managing and disposing of records.
